

July 22, 2009

Recovery.gov offers new ARRA funding maps

As of today, the federal Recovery.gov Web site is offering new mapping features that provide an overview of economic stimulus law spending by state, federal department and recipient.

The Recovery Accountability and Transparency Board has introduced a Web page on Recovery.gov with new and expanded mapping features. The maps show how much funding is being distributed to each state, how much funding is being provided to each state by each federal department, how the funding is flowing to individual contractors, and how many jobs are being created in the locations. A fourth map has links to state Web sites providing information on economic stimulus law spending.

Users can click on specific links for more detailed information. For example, for Virginia, one of the maps provides a list of all federal departments and their economic stimulus law funding to that state.